Volhynia Massacre: 100,000 Poles Slaughtered in a Forgotten Ethnic Bloodbath

In 1943, Volhynia and Eastern Galicia witnessed one of the darkest chapters of Third Reich history. More than 100,000 Poles were massacred, entire villages erased, and families torn apart. As survivors sought justice, vengeance gave rise to new waves of violence across postwar Europe. This video uncovers the roots of hatred, the bloody events of 1943, and the long echo of retribution — a haunting reflection of Third Reich history that still divides nations and defines memory in Third Reich history.

The silence that followed Volhynia is almost as haunting as the massacre itself. So many lives erased, and yet history nearly forgot them. This deserves every bit of remembrance.

May the souls of all who died in Volhynia rest in peace.

The insipid, poorly-written moralizing is just too much in this series. Insulting to any halfway intelligent, attentive viewer.

It should be noted that it was not only Ukrainian nationalist followers and Nazis who carried out the massacres; the Poles also had a field day killing Jews.

Poles deserved this as the Polish Army invaded the Soviet Union in 1919 and the lands were only taken back when the Germans and Soviets carved up Poland in 1939. Your little massacre is small change but you conveniently ignore the fact that one million Belorussian civilians were murdered horribly, set alight in barns, by German Army and their fascist Ukrainian collaborators in 1941, including fascist Lithuanians. To this day they have blood on their hands which will never wash away. You and the West have ignored this for 85 years, how convenient while always criticising Russia and Belorussians. Dont you think Belorussians have …

Not forgotten. Denied so the Soviet's could have their vote on the new UN Security Council. This blame belongs to the Allies.
